

INVENTS "INTERATOMIC" MOTOR

The Rev. Antonio D'Angelo, an Italian Jesuit priest from Brazil, claims that he has invented a motor that makes use of "interatomic" energy to generate many times the power it receives originally from an electric battery. He declares his motor can be used to supply electric lighting cheaply, and to run airplanes, trains and autos. He is shown here at New York city with his invention.