

INVENTOR STILL IN SERIOUS CONDITION

Washington, March 10.---Lester J. Hendershot, inventor of the fuel-less motor, was still in a serious condition at Emergency hospital here today from an electric shock he received last Tuesday. His physician said he had difficulty speaking since nerves in his palate were partly paralyzed and the inventor denied himself to newspapermen.
